Sharing Space:

One street. Many needs.

How is residential parking managed today?

The Residential Parking Program (RPP) uses posted parking restrictions and permits to manage on-street parking in select neighbourhoods experiencing curbside demand.

- Eligible households in select RPP zones may have up to two annual household permits.
- Eligible households can also request temporary or visitor parking permits for guests, caregivers, contractors and others providing services at the home.
- A permit allows an eligible vehicle to park beyond certain posted restrictions within its assigned zone. It does not reserve or guarantee a parking space.

Currently there are:

19
active RPP zones in Edmonton

4,800
permits

1,200
temporary and visitor parking permits issued every year

Enforcement officers patrol the zones and issue tickets to parked vehicles that do not display permits.

Other parking tools

Outside of the RPP, the City of Edmonton uses other tools to manage curbside demand in residential areas to make the most of this valuable public asset.

Parking Tool	How is the tool used?
Time-based Restrictions (e.g., max 2-hour parking limits)	It encourages turnover of vehicles in high-traffic areas, allowing more people to park on a given day.
Accessible Parking Zones	Residents with accessibility needs that do not have a driveway leading to the street can request an accessible parking stall near their residence to easily get to their personal vehicles or specialized transit, like Dedicated Accessible Transit Service (DATS.).
Passenger Loading Zones Short-term (5 to 30 minutes)	People can be picked up or dropped off safely outside apartments, condos and other housing complexes; reduces traffic congestion.
Event Parking Restrictions	Parking restrictions are in effect when major events occur.
On-Street Construction and Maintenance (OSCAM) Permits	Required for most work on City road-right-of-ways, including roads, sidewalks and boulevards, which can include underground utility work and temporary wastebins and seacans.
Parking Restrictions for Safety and Sightlines	Restricts parking near intersections and crosswalks in places such as schools; improves the visibility of pedestrians crossing.
